Question Two: Read the text carefully, then answer the following questions.

Moving home, starting a new job or receiving bad news, for example, can considerably raise anxiety levels. It would seem logical to ascribe a racing heart and raised blood pressure to nervousness and apprehension, but would we automatically link those nerves to an upset stomach or back pain? The truth is that our emotions can trigger a host of physical reactions and that is why we need to concern ourselves with maintaining our emotional health. 'How to become a happier you' is a hot topic at the moment and we are inundated with advice and tips online. There is an abundance of websites with surveys, questionnaires, tips and shared personal experiences available to us. Even schools are running mindfulness classes for their students as part of the curriculum.

There are studies that show that if we are experiencing pain, yet endeavour not to show it on our faces, the degree of pain we experience can be less intense than if we wince and frown. Likewise, if we show that we are frightened when faced with danger, this can actually exacerbate the fear that we're feeling. According to the experts, this is because the way we experience emotion does not just involve the brain; it is far more complex. However, not all scientists are in complete agreement over the benefit of suppressing emotions or faking facial expressions to influence our moods. Research suggests that although faking emotions can help in the short term, continually suppressing emotions can have a negative effect on our general health. If the face is not involved in expressing an emotion, that emotion may eventually find another outlet, such as depression, a pessimistic outlook, or even physical illness.

The concept of emotional labour, which was first identified in 1983, references the need for people to concern themselves with routine chores that often result in dissatisfaction. However, the term was originally invented to describe the requirement for certain employees, for instance those in the service industries such as flight attendants and shop assistants, to present a happy face to clients, however bad they may be feeling. In other words, it is part of their job to pretend to be happy and hide any negative emotions. This faking of emotion can contribute to emotional exhaustion, leaving the person drained with little emotional energy left.

1. The text mentioned three life events that can raise anxiety levels. Write down two of them?
2. The text mentioned two negative consequences of nervousness and apprehension. Write down them.
3. The text mentioned four online resources which can improve outlook, write down three of them.
4. According to the studies mentioned, what effect can suppressing the facial expression of pain have?
5. What is a potential long-term risk of continually suppressing emotions?
6. Quote the sentence which shows the negative consequence of emotional labour for an employee.
7. From the text, find the word which means "make the problem worse".
8. What does the underlined pronoun (they) refer to?
9. Suggest three situations in which people have to fake or hide their emotions.
